MR. ASTOR CAME.

How Joseph Chamberlain's Monocle Averted the Expatriate's Flunk.

The very latest London anecdote concerning William Waldorf Astor, who is now paying a brief visit to the land of his nativity, dates from a certain dinner party given by the eccentric expatriate at which the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain and his wife were guests. The two started in ample time, but owing to a street blockade were delayed and arrived one minute late. Ushered into the reception room, they found it vacant. The guests had been seated promptly on the stroke of the hour.

Mr. Chamberlain wasn't worried. "Tell Mr. Astor to come and conduct Mrs. Chamberlain to the table," he said in his blindest tone to the flunky. "Y-y-yes, sir," said the servant, with one glance at the awe inspiring monocle.

He must have delivered the message. Mr. Astor came.

A Ninety-year-old "Cop."

"Uncle" William Shaver, aged ninety years, was one of the force of special police who served at the county fair recently held at Clifton, N. Y. He was a conspicuous figure with his red badge bearing the word "police." He kept a careful watch for pickpockets and other lawbreakers, but the crowd was an orderly one, and the bulk of his duties consisted in making passageways through crowded aisles in the buildings or preventing teams from being driven on forbidden ground. He worked during all four days of the exhibition and with greater agility than some men his juniors.
